Polling is set to begin from April 12 in five of the six states in April 11th Presidential polls, according to the Ministry of Information and Broadcasting. Counting will take place on April 19th. If a party or alliance receives a majority of just over 30 per cent of the national votes — the required majority — it is deemed to form the government. In the event of less than a majority, the President may decide whether to call the result of the election as "election not-held", which will not trigger any immediate action. The constitution stipulates that if there is a tie in the popular vote, the candidate who received the most votes in the election to the state legislative assembly should be proclaimed the winner. The results of the state elections are expected to be known between April 24 and 28. Authorities in the Muslim-majority Maldives are gearing up for April elections amid growing fears that a week-old coup may trigger a bloodbath. Vice-President Yameen Abdul Gayoom declared a state of emergency on Thursday, a week after troops stormed the presidential palace, and the decision is expected to trigger a vote on April 13. Police and army units have locked down much of the capital and placed thousands of people under arrest. Al Jazeera's special report on the Maldives offers a rare insight into why the island nation, ruled by former president Mohamed Nasheed since he came to power in 2008, is on the brink of a political crisis that may yet split it into two. The video was "retaliatory" and "aimed at domestic politics", the former president said, adding that he was convinced the former Justice Minister Abdulla Muaz Ali accused him of electoral fraud. President Nasheed has previously denied claims of electoral fraud made by political opponents, but his government has been accused of abusing its power. "There is a sense of a climate of escalation, of rising tension, of growing anxiety," former Justice Minister Muaz told Al Jazeera. A UN envoy who visited the Maldives last week said the government in the Indian Ocean archipelago of roughly 330,000 people had used "excessive force" against its people. In a video uploaded on Twitter, President Gayoom told supporters to keep their "calm and patience". "We are facing a difficult phase of our history. The government will be changed," he said in the video. Maldives election Leading

Q: How to force SSL in Browser and Workstation I am using Eclipse and Tomcat 7.0.2 and Java 1.6.0_20. I am using SSL for the ports 80 and 443 for my Java web server and for my Tomcat server. Introducing Norma Andrews September 27, 2014 One of my goals this year is to catch up on reading the backlist of the publishers that have been mine and my husband's, that we have loved and read time and time again but when we count them up we've read at least 24 of them. Since Richard caught up with it already and has read 100 books he has a head start on my goal. He is also a huge catalog-browsing enthusiast (a good thing) and goes to www.abebooks.com which is a great site that lists all the backlist of the publishers – it's like a library catalog. He finds and buys the books that are new and a lot of the books that are coming out in paperback, and since I love reading the journals of the authors I wanted to join him in making one list of all the books we'd read that were published between the date that we married in 1997 and the time we became empty nesters in 2001. I kept track of his success by checking my own bookshelf for any books that I'd read that were published since 1997. I am not doing this list as a link up, for all the links that I did my thank you list at the end of 2013, but because it's a list of some of the author's I've loved reading since we first started dating, and I've loved reading more in the last 12 years than I ever did before. One of my favorite authors, Chris Baty is also not on this list because only the four or five books she's written
